Abstract. In this thesis, the main directions of export promotion are studied according to a number of important factors, and the positive impact of export assisstance program on the economy is analyzed. It should be noted that Uzbekistan is expected to strengthen its export simulation in the upcomim years. Therefore, expecting changes are an important issue for Uzbekistan to become export-oriented country.

Key words. Uzbekistan's Export promotion, agricultural sector, export performance, trade.

Agricultural sector has great potential to increase export in Uzbekistan. Agriculture is an important sector of the economy of our country. This industry provides, on the one hand, food security and abundance on the tables of people, on the other hand, various industries - with the appropriate raw materials.

Agriculture occupies one of the leading places in terms of the number of people employed in the sectors of the economy. About half of the population of Uzbekistan lives in rural areas. All this necessitates close attention on the part of the deputies to the issues of the effectiveness of the development of agriculture. For example, the Preelection program of UzLiDeP explicitly states such a priority as further diversification and development of agriculture based on comprehensive support for the development of entrepreneurship, farming and farmers, and the formation of a class of real owners in the countryside. One of the mechanisms for the implementation of election promises is the organization of effective parliamentary control. From this point of view, the Decree of the President of the Republic of Uzbekistan "On measures to radically improve the system for protecting the rights and legitimate interests of farmers and owners of household yards, the effective use of agricultural sown areas" contains specific powers, which, UzLiDeP is sure, will bring parliamentary activity to a qualitatively new level.

There are several ways in which a state can support the export production of its agricultural sector. Government support of export production of agricultural products can take many forms. One way is to provide financial incentives to farmers and agribusinesses, such as tax breaks, subsidies, and low-interest loans. This can help reduce the cost of production and make agricultural products more competitive in the global market.

Another way is to invest in infrastructure, such as roads, ports, and storage facilities, to improve the efficiency of the supply chain and reduce transportation costs. This can help farmers get their products to market more quickly and at a lower cost, making them more competitive in the global market.

The government can also provide technical assistance and training to farmers to improve their productivity and the quality of their products. This can help farmers adopt new technologies and best practices that can increase their yields and improve the quality of their products, making them more attractive to buyers in the global market.

Additionally, the government can negotiate trade agreements with other countries to reduce trade barriers and increase market access for its agricultural exports. This can help farmers access new markets and increase their exports, boosting the economy and creating jobs.

Finally, the government can promote its agricultural products through marketing campaigns and participation in international trade shows and exhibitions. This can help raise awareness of the quality and diversity of its agricultural products and attract new buyers in the global market.

Overall, by implementing these measures, the government of Uzbekistan can create a favorable environment for the agricultural sector to thrive and increase its exports, which can boost the economy, create jobs, and improve the standard of living for farmers and rural communities.
